The Food Hygiene Rating Bill passed the final consideration stage in Stormont in December 2015 and is due to receive Royal Assent and become law in Northern Ireland. The change in the law will mean that food businesses who sell food directly to the public, and who receive a rating under the statutory Food Hygiene Rating Scheme, will be legally required to display their food hygiene rating sticker at their premises. This includes restaurants, takeaways, mobile caterers, schools, hospitals, residential care homes, delicatessens and supermarkets. To date the display of the food hygiene rating at food business premises has been voluntary.

It is anticipated that the bill will become law in October 2016. Council Environmental Health Officers will shortly commence preparing businesses for its introduction by offering additional food hygiene visits and one to one support to assist them in improving their Food Hygiene Rating if necessary.
